THE BEWITCHED WEATHER OF BUCCANEER BAY

It shoots as good as it looks.

The Daisy® "Safari Mark I"™ looks, feels and acts just like a big-game hunter's gun.

But it's scaled to your size, so you can make a big game out of learning marksmanship.

It's not a toy. You'll know that the first time you heft one and feel that solid weight and balance.

The "Safari Mark I" has things you'll find only on grown-up guns...like a crossbolt safety and trigger guard cocking (ask Dad about those).

And...to make learning marksmanship more fun, we'll make you a deal. We'll give you a $4.00 Trap-Target Kit for just $1.99 when you buy your "Safari Mark I" or any Daisy air-gun.

While you're there pick-up the new "Air Rifle Marksman" booklet (it's loaded with marksman information including local shooting education programs you can join), or send 50c to Daisy, Dept. 101, Rogers, Arkansas 72756 and we'll send you a copy.

Since the 1800's, American boys have learned marksmanship with a Daisy. Now it's your turn.

THE SIGN

The most respected resident of Howler Hill was old Gram Bison. Gram had the rare gift of "second sight" and she saw things hidden from ordinary folks. She could tell the hill people where to find lost cattle and could warn them of coming troubles. The things Gram "saw" always came true.

Also Gram owned a "magical" spring near her cabin where she lived alone. Its bitter water had the power to ease pain and to cure sickness. The hill people came to get her advice and her spring's cure-all water; and children came to listen to her stories.

One day as Gram sat on her cabin porch, telling a story to some children, little Clem Shawn suddenly said, "Pa says you're more'n to erabe old, Gram. How'll folks get along when you're gone?"

"You'll get along all right," she smiled. "Besides, I won't be far away. I'll always be about keepin' an eye on you."

How'll we know you are watchin' us?" Clem's little sister Sara asked.

"I'll find a way to tell you I'm near," she answered. "I'll send a sign. Maybe it will have the shape of a bird or a flower. That's a promise. Now, let's finish the story about the stranger."

Before Gram could complete the story, a real stranger approached her cabin.

"Hello, Gram! Remember me?" he asked. "You're Eli Rose—fatter and older, but I know you. You've been away a long time."

Eli was one of the five Howler boys who had been away to war. He had never come back home, not even for funerals.

"I'm not surprised to see you, Eli," Gram said. "I knew you were coming. I saw it."

Eli grinned. "Then maybe you saw why I came. Get rid of the kids so we can talk."

At a word from Gram, the children left. Eli Rose told Gram he'd come from the city to buy her cabin and plot of ground.

"You don't want my place. You hated the hills when you were a boy . . . you still do," she said crisply. "It's the water you want. You have a scheme to use it some way."

Eli smiled. "You're sharp as a razor! It is the water I want. Plan to bottle it and sell it as the greatest cure-all discovery of the century." His voice was sympathetic, as he added, "You ought to sell the place. You're too old to live here alone!"

"I'm spyin' on you, Eli!" Gram snapped, rising from her chair. "I aim to end my days here and keep giving the water free to folks who need it. Take your money and go back to the city." Then she marched into the cabin and slammed the door.

Eli Rose went back to the settlement and that evening he met with a few men in the town's only store owned by Jim Shawn, Clem and Sara's father. Eli urged the men to force Gram to leave her cabin.

"She should be in an asylum where they'd take care of her," he told the men. "She's always been teched in the head, seeing and knowing things. She's plain crazy!"

"Crazy like a fox!" Jim scowled. "Guess you've forgotten the time Gram saw you in that bear trap and sent folks to find you. Gram saved your life, Eli Rose!"

Finally, Eli gave up and drove away. Two days later, Clem and Sara went to see Gram. When they called and she did not reply, they pushed open the door and found Gram lying on the floor, dead. There was a bruise on her head where she'd been hit.

Deep mourning covered the hills. People came from miles around, bringin' garden flowers to cover Gram's grave.

While the hill folks grieved, the state police searched for the killer. They questioned everyone, including Eli Rose. But they couldn't find anyone who had been near Gram's cabin that night. Eli had witnesses to prove he was in the city, so they crossed him off the list of suspects.

A week passed with no clue to the killer. Then, on the eighth night, a storm swept the hills, lashing them with torrents of rain.

The sun shone the next day, and Clem and Sara set out to explore the storm's damage. They wandered into the little cemetery and over to Gram's grave. The wilted flowers on the grave had been beaten into a soggy mass by the rain; but rising from the mass was a single rose, standing straight and fresh, untouched by the storm.

The children stared at it, and Sara whispered, "Do you s'pose Gram sent it?"

"She said the sign might be in the shape of a flower," Clem remembered.

They took the rose to their father and told him about Gram's solemn promise. Jim took the rose and the children to the state police. They listened to the story and asked what the sign meant.

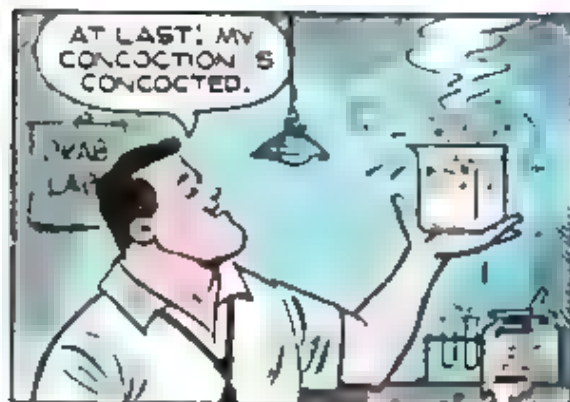

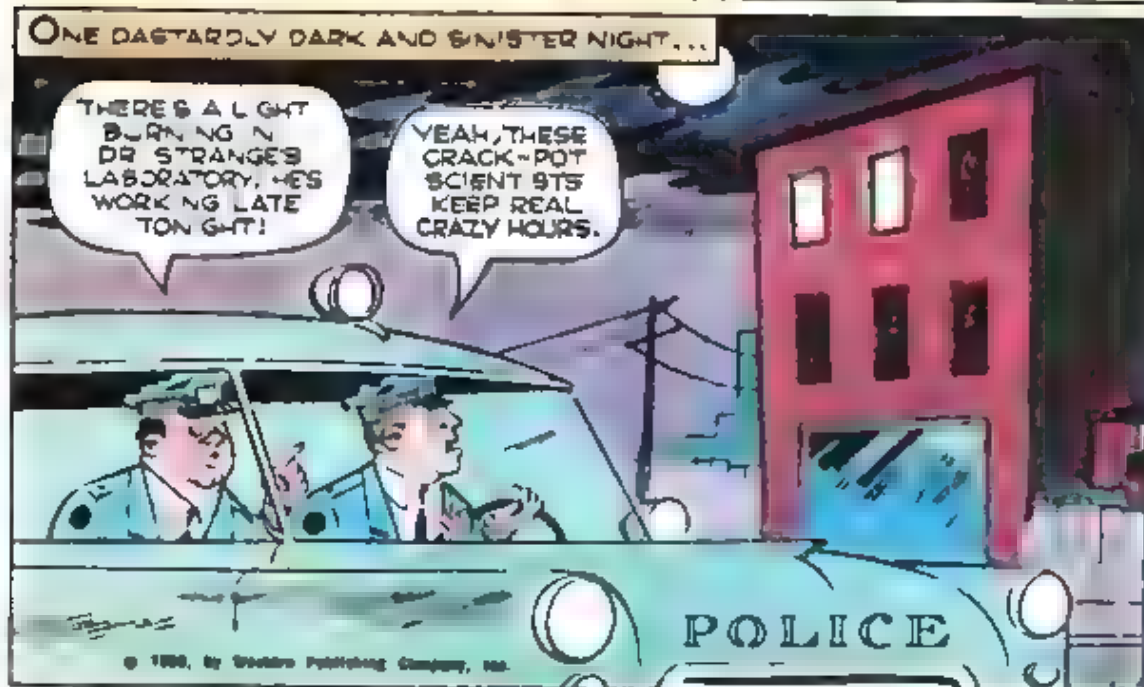

"A mean-looking stranger came to Gram's cabin that day. His name was Eli Rose," Clem answered. "We think Gram sent the rose sign to tell us that he killed her."

The police questioned Eli Rose again, and he finally confessed that he and his witnesses had lied. He had gone to Gram's cabin again to scare her into selling the place. She had picked up a stick of firewood and had ordered him away. In his anger he grabbed the wood from her and struck her.

Gram's cabin still stands on the hill. It looks empty, but the hill people know Gram is there, keeping a watchful eye on them!
